Withers' session provided an in-depth look at the powder coating process from pretreatment and powder material selection, to powder application, recovery, curing and essential components for an overall well-designed, high performing powder coating system. Withers also instructed attendees on how to make the best system choices to meet their powder coating needs.

"It was an honor to present at one of the most highly anticipated tradeshow in the fencing industry," said Withers. "I really enjoyed sharing the essentials of powder coating directly with fencing industry members and demonstrating the benefits of using Axalta's powder coatings on their projects."

FENCETECH is an annual event that provides those in the fencing industry with technical and applied technology forums, as well as new product innovations and developments. The event also highlights improvements and tips to optimize powder coating in the industry.
