Public Storage Opens New Milpitas Storage Units in California

MILPITAS, California—Public Storage (NYSE:PSA) opened more than 700 new indoor storage units today in the Silicon Valley to help residents find space in the bustling area. The new building is between existing Public Storage structures and replaces a former vehicle storage lot.

These new units at Public Storage 1080 Pecten Ct. Milpitas, CA 95035 bring the total count at this location to more than 1,200. They are near the I-680 in a well-traveled neighborhood, within walking distance of thousands of new apartments and condos, as well as a planned Milpitas BART station. The location is a convenient choice for new movers in the Silicon Valley and Bay Area coming for job opportunities in the tech industry and other fields.

San Francisco and San Jose have become the least affordable housing markets in the country, according to the National Association of Realtors, and new movers are instead flocking to smaller, slightly less expensive towns like Milpitas, which is just north of San Jose. The city's population grew 16 percent in just six years, according to U.S. Census data, and Public Storage is adding space for its neighbors in need of more room.

The new units are all climate controlled and indoors, while some of the existing units are located outside and have easy drive-up access. There's a perfect-sized space for every mover!
