Crestwood Biodiversity Position Statement

Crestwood's biodiversity position:

To be an industry leader in facility siting, infrastructure design and construction, operations and legacy asset management to promote positive biodiversity impacts, as well as maintain our commitment to sustainable and efficient management of natural resources across the enterprise.

As a midstream energy infrastructure company, Crestwood acknowledges that its projects and operations impact biodiversity. The company understands that it can proactively design solutions and processes to mitigate these impacts to provide positive outcomes for biodiversity. Crestwood knows that how it treats the land is how it is measured as a neighbor, an employer and an operator across its footprint.

In keeping with Crestwood's Guiding Principles and Environmental Safety and Regulatory Policy, in addition to compliance with local, state and national regulations, accounting for and minimizing impacts to biodiversity is already the standard for doing business at Crestwood.

How Crestwood will support this position:

- Crestwood understands that biodiversity value is rooted in place and that this value is both ecologically and culturally important. As an industry leader, Crestwood will respect these values. Crestwood will minimize impacts on all communities and respect the unique significance of nature to indigenous people where we operate.
- Crestwood recognizes that a diversity of approaches to land management brings a diversity of results. As an industry leader, Crestwood will strive for best-in-class biodiversity management on both new and legacy properties.
- Crestwood knows that intent is not action. As an industry leader, it will operationalize continuous improvement approaches for land management across its entire footprint and engage those knowledgeable in tribal culture and traditions, community members, landowners, regulators and employees to ensure these approaches align with local, regional and national biodiversity objectives.
